

Forty-second street. Under forty years old, more than six feet tall, bright and handsome, Castleman was a welcome acquisition to the Southern colony in New York on his arrival a few years ago, but of late he had kept away from his old friends and had drifted into circles of society they did not frequent.

Castleman was one of the sons of Gen. John E. Breckinridge Castleman of Louisville. In his native town Breckinridge Castleman was particularly fortunate as a youth and a young man. His personality, aided by his intelligence and his social position, enabled him to accumulate a fortune in his own right.

It was something more than three years ago when Breckinridge Castleman, having used up all his own funds in keeping pace with the fast life of Broadway, became dependent upon his people back home. He made an arrangement with Louis Jacoby of No. 228 East Eleventh street by which he was to be sheltered and fed and kept supplied with a limited amount of spending money from an allowance supplied by Gen. Castelman.

Although he was practically penniless, Breckenridge Castleman had good clothes, and he knew how to wear them. He knew how to conduct himself in any company. At times he would associate with men he had known in his days of prosperity and would live regularly at the Jacoby home, apparently engaged in bracing himself for an attempt at re-

At such times he was optimistic and enthusiastic. He would really formulate plans and outline actions looking for a resumption of a business career. Then he would disappear, and it might be days, or even weeks before Jacoby would see him again, and he would come back broken down and despondent.

Although Gen. Castlemin was liberal in his allowance, much latitude was given Jacoby in distributing the money to Breckenridge. When Breckenridge showed evidences of caring for himself, he was given enough money to carry him around. When he betrayed unmistakable signs of getting ready for one of his periodical disappearances Jacoby would shut down on the allowance.

After long persuasion from his family, and Jacoby, Breckenridge Castleman, consented, two weeks ago, to enter the sanitarium at Westport, Conn. He was to have taken a course of treatment for the cure of the liquor habit and the building up of his general health.

One week at the sanitarium sufficed for Castleman. He came back to New York City and, being possessed of a trunk, his name registered at the Hotel Belmont, where he remained two days. He had no money, but his apartment carried him until he could raise a considerable stack of bar and restaurant checks. Anttila, repudiating a demand for a settlement, had returned to Jacoby's home.

SPENT MONEY PROVIDED TO REDEEM HIS DEEM HIS TRUNK.

An amount sufficient to defray his debt to the hotel and redeem his trunk had been given to Castleman. He went out and spent it. On Tuesday morning he appeared at Jacoby's place and asked for his overcoat. Jacoby refused to give it to him, fearing he would pawn it and Castleman returned a police-man. He went away in a towering rage and did not show up again until yesterday morning.

The weather was so raw and cold that Jacoby gave him his overcoat. He pawned the coat, and at 9 o'clock he returned to the hot room in his bath, where he was known. His credit was good and he went into the hot room to prepare for a Turkish bath.

His condition was such that the attendant kept close watch upon him. After a while he began to grow restless and carried to a cot. There he was suddenly seized with a hemorrhage. An ambulance was called from Flower Hospital and he died in the arms of Dr.

Andrews, the ambulance surgeon. Gen. Castlemann was notified to-day of the death of his son. He is expected in New York to-morrow. The bereavement falls with redoubled effect upon Gen. Castlemann for only a few months ago Major David Castlemann, an older son, died in California, following a separation from his wife, who was a Miss Bailey of Lexington.

Takes Poison by Accident.

Max Lowenthal, fifty years old, died in Harlem Hospital at noon to-day. Lowenthal, who is a capmaker, was taken home by his wife at No. 231 West One Hundred and Fifty-third street early to-day, suffering from an unknown poison, which, he told the police of the West One Hundred and Fifty-second street station, he had taken by mistake.
